On Sunday, April 3, I had the privilege of attending a baptism at the Glyfada beach, where two new believers publicly took their stand with Jesus. One was from Iran and one was from Afghanistan. Below you will see a picture of four brothers from Afghanistan who were present that day. Revel and rejoice in this picture. It is a rare shot indeed: four men, all from different ethnic groups which traditionally do not get along with each other, embracing one another as Christian brothers.

Afterward, one of them ("N"--third from right--a recent AIMS graduate, came up to me excitedly pointing out how their standing together like this formed a picture of the vision God has given him for the difference Christ--and only Christ-- can make in Afghanistan, and his passion for letting God use him (along with brothers like these) to help make this vision a reality.

Thank you for remembering these brothers (and others like them) in your prayers!
